This volume illustrates Volumes XI and XII of the History and at the same time gives a general impression of the flow of art during three centuries. From Vespasian to Commodus the Graeco-Roman art-stream spreads over the world from Scotland to Arabia and from Spain to Chinese Turkestan. But with the advent of the Severan Dynasty there is a change; for the Syrians brought into Italy a flood of Oriental ideas which presently had a most profound effect on art. Classical realism is seen gradually giving place to eastern expressionism until there arises the new dynamic simplification that concentrates on strength of expression. This is the late-classical art that was to lead to the art called Byzantine.

PREFACE

The fifth and last volume of plates serves to illustrate a variety of monuments which have been referred to in Volumes XI and XII of the Cambridge Ancient History. The surviving mass of antiquities that was created between the foundation of the first and the rise of the second Flavian Dynasties is so great, scattered as it is from Scotland to Arabia and from Spain to Chinese Turkestan, that a rigorous selection of illustrations has been enforced by limitation of space. Enough should, however, be found here to give a general impression of the flow of art during nearly three centuries. From Vespasian to Commodus that Graeco-Roman art-stream, which the fourth volume of plates showed in process of formation, continued to spread over the world, so that there were men who could drink from Campanian silver cups in Sweden and seal with Greek intaglios in Khotan. With the advent of the Severan Dynasty there was a change.

Juvenal's complaint, iam pridem Syrus in Tiberim defluxit Orontes, was an exaggeration for his day and certainly untrue of the art of his time. But it was an unconscious prophecy.

The Syrians, Domna, Maesa and Mamaea, Caracalla posing as the new Alexander, and Elagabalus with his curious cult, all poured into Italy a flood of oriental ideas which presently had a far more profound effect on art than on politics or economics. Classical realism is seen gradually giving place to eastern expressionism until there arises the new dynamic simplification that concentrates on strength of expression. This is the late-classical art that was to lead to the art called Byzantine.

In architecture this volume, which includes buildings from the Colosseum to the Basilica of Maxentius, illustrates the most imposing achievements of the architects of Rome as well as some of the finest buildings of the Empire.

The volume is indebted to the writers of the several chapters concerned for the selection of the subjects illustrated and for the commentaries. Dr Ekholm has dealt with the objects found in the lands of the Northern Peoples, Professor Rostovtzeff with those of Sarmatians and Parthians, and Professor Alföldi with finds in the Danubian region. Spanish and African antiquities are described by Professor Albertini, British by Professor Collingwood, and Rhenish by Dr Stade. Professor Halphen has supervised the description of the Central Asian monuments, and Professor Nock of those illustrating the pagan cults of the Empire, while Professor Christensen has dealt with the early Sassanid antiquities. I am responsible for a few isolated plates, and, as formerly, for the description of coins which have been referred to by the writers of many chapters. In the period covered by the two last volumes of the Cambridge Ancient History the evidential value of coins is so considerable that it has seemed desirable to illustrate a fairly large number. The chief contributor to this volume is Professor Rodenwaldt, whose expert selection of illustrations and careful commentaries on no less than sixty plates tell the story of the gradual change in the art of the ancient world and lead up to the splendours of the age of Constantine.

The Editors wish to join Professor Rodenwaldt in expressing gratitude to the Directors of the German Institutes in Athens and Rome for their help in providing photographs, and especially to Mr A. D. Trendall for much time spent in securing illustrations required for this volume when he was Librarian of the British School in Rome.

Thanks for assistance in supplying photographs are due to the Director of the British Museum and to the Directors and Curators of museums in Berlin, Bonn, Budapest, Cassel, Cluj, Copenhagen, Mainz, Mannheim, New York, Schwerin, Stettin and Trèves, also to the German Archaeological Institute in Berlin, to the Departments of Antiquities in Algeria, Tunisia and Syria, to the Yale Doura Expedition in New Haven, and to Mademoiselle Brühl of the Musée Guimet in Paris. Acknowledgement is gratefully made to Professor A. B. Cook for the loan of certain blocks from his Zeus, and to Professor Albertini, Professor J. Kostrzewski, Mr R. P. Longden, Herr J. Rodenwaldt, Professor Rostovtzeff, Monsieur H. Seyrig, Dr E. M. W. Tillyard, and Dr N. Toll for the use of photographs in their possession.

PREFACE

Help in providing plaster casts of coins has been given by Mr J. Allen and Mr H. Mattingly of the British Museum, by Monsieur J. Babelon of the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris, by Mr G. Galster of the Royal Cabinet in Copenhagen, and by the Director of the Münzkabinett in Berlin, and thanks are due to all of them. Mrs Collingwood, Miss M. V. Taylor, and Mr Martin Robertson have kindly rendered help in various ways.

The Staff of the University Press once again deserve thanks for their skill and labour in dealing with a volume that it has been no easy task to produce. In concluding the last volume of plates, I wish to record my deep indebtedness and gratitude to the Editors of the History for their advice and help during fourteen years of co-operation.

PREFACE

There is a design on the outside cover after a second-century bronze statuette, in the possession of Professor A. B. Cook, representing a syncretism of several goddesses. The figure is robed as Venus, has the horns of Io or Hathor, the plumes of Isis, a pillar like that of Athena Parthenos, and the rudder and cornucopiae of Tyche.

THE NORTHERN PEOPLES

The representations of Germanic men and women which occur on the Column of Trajan are among the best and most realistic of their kind. The figures on the column of Marcus Aurelius have more classical features, figures, and garb. (xi, 59, 70.)

[a] From the Column of Trajan in Rome. The heads of two barbarians.

[b] A deputation approaching Trajan during the second Dacian War in the winter of A.D. 105/6. On the left a Dacian, above him two Bosphoran Greeks with headbands, to the right of him six Bastarnae distinguished by a characteristic hair-knot. The stately figure in the foreground is perhaps a chieftain introducing the others. From the column of Trajan.

[c] Captive German women; from the Column of Marcus Aurelius in Rome.

- [b] Bronze buckle.
- [c] Roman gold pendant.
- [d] Roman bronze trulla.
- [e] Handle of Roman bronze jug.
- [f] Bronze mounts for a drinking horn.
- [g] Celtic bronze fibula.
- [h], [i] Native bronze fibulae.
- [j] Bronze buckle, Roman Provincial type.
- [k] Iron sword, bent before burial.
- [l] Bronze fibula.
- [m] Roman bucket (situla).
- [n] Iron spearhead.
- [o] Iron head of javelin.
- [p] Native potting vessel.
- [g], [j], [l], [m]–[o] from the cemetery of Pičhora near Dobřichov. (xi, 57, 70.)

GERMANY

- [a] West-Germanic earthen vessel with 'Rädchenmäander.'
(xi, 60.)
- [b] Bronze fibula.
- [c], [f] Bronze buckles.
- [d] Bone comb.
- [e] Burgundian iron girdle-hook. (xi, 61.)
- [g] Gold clasp for a woman's necklace.
- [h] Roman silver cup.
- [i] Gold pendant for a woman's necklace.
- [j] Silver fibula.
- [k] Bronze strap-end.
- [l] Roman silver bowl.
- [m] Bronze buckle.
- [n] Bronze armlet.
- [o] East-Germanic earthen vessel with 'Linienbandmäander.'
(xi, 60.)

Except [c] and [h] all native work. (xi, 70, 72.)

[a]–[d], [f] and [l] from West-Germanic territory; the rest from East-Germanic; [l] comes from the great silver hoard of Hildesheim (E. Pernice and F. Winter, Der Hildesheimer Silberfund, Berlin, 1901); [e] from the Burgundian burial-place at Ramhütte, Pomerania (J. Kostrzewski, Die ostgermanische Kultur der Spätlatènezeit, Mannus-Bibliothek, xviii, 1919, Abb. 43); [h] is from a burial at Lübzow, Pomerania (Praehist. Zeitschr. 1912); [j] from a burial at Rondsen (S. Anger, Das Gräberfeld von Rondsen, Graudenz, 1890).

DENMARK

Objects from inhumation graves. [a] Silver cup signed by a Greek silversmith and made in Capua. (xi, 61, 63.) For similar cups see Volume of Plates, iv, 128.

[b], [c] Silver hairpins with heads covered in filigree decorated gold leaf.

[d] Bowl of bluish-white glass of a type common in Pompeii. (xi, 61, 63.)

[e], [f] Silver fibula with gold-wire ornament.

[g] Glass beaker with facet surface. A similar piece has been found in Pompeii. (xi, 61, 63.)

[h] Pottery from a typical Jutland inhumation burial.

All except [a], [d] and [g] are of native workmanship. (xi, 70, 72.)

THE SCANDINAVIAN PENINSULA

Objects from graves and other finds. [a] Gold pendant with filigree work from a necklace (cf. p. 6 [i]).

[b], [c] Silver coins of Verus and Faustina Junior. Of some 7000 Roman coins from Scandinavian lands more than 5000 have been found in the island of Gotland. (xi, 61.)

[d], [f] Gold finger-rings; these, which were perhaps wedding-rings, were worn on the right hand by men and women.

[e] Iron shield-boss with small round and ornamental silver plates, bronze rivets, and handle with rivets. The rivets on boss and handle have silver-plated heads. The profiled ends of the handle are decorated with filigree silver foil and small dummy silver rivet heads.

[g] Iron sword, with one edge. (xi, 58.)

[h] Bronze strap-end.

[i], [k], [l] Silver fibulae with gold filigree work.

[j] Pottery bowl.

[m], [o] Glass gaming pieces. (xi, 61, 71.)

[n] Bone die.

[p] Gold pendant resembling [a] but older.

All except [b], [c], [m], [o] of native workmanship (xi, 70, 72 sq.).

[a]–[c], [e], [h], [j], [m]–[o] found in Sweden, the rest in Norway. [a], [e], [h] from Öland; [b], [c] Skåne; [d], [f], [i], [l] from a woman's skeleton in the cemetery at Store-Dal, Østfold (see pp. 12, 14); [g] Hedmark; [j] Gotland; [m]–[o] Östergötland; [k] Østfold; [p] Vestfold.

BURIAL CUSTOMS

According to Tacitus the Germanic peoples cremated their dead and their burial customs were simple. These statements are too definite. From the late Bronze age onwards cremation was the more common, but through Celtic influence inhumation occasionally came into use before our era, and later became frequent. At this time Roman bronze and glass ware frequently appears, especially in inhumation graves. The older hypothesis, that such graves contained the remains of Roman traders, has long been abandoned. The numerous fibulae, the majority of the pottery, etc. are local work, and, furthermore, these richly equipped tombs are typically barbarian and un-Roman. (xi, 72 sq.)

[a] Part of the contents of an inhumation grave at Grossgrünow, Pomerania. Terra sigillata bowl, Roman bronze jug and local pottery bowl.

[Mannus, Ergbd. v, Taf. XVI]

[b] Detail of a woman's grave at Juellinge, Laaland, Denmark. At the shoulders silver fibulae, on the skull gold and silver hair pins [see p. 8 [b], [c], on the fingers rings, in the hand strainer for a trulla, above the head scissors, glass cups, drinking horns, lock and key of a wooden box, trulla and a damaged bronze cauldron.

BURIALS

Tacitus declared that the Germanic peoples buried their dead in barrows. Archaeological research has, however, proved that barrow-burials do not predominate, for both low stone cairns and flat tomb-stones of various shapes, circular, triangular, or rectangular, were generally employed. A further type, common in cemeteries both in the island of Bornholm and in Sweden and Norway, was that of the Standing Stones (Swedish bautastenar) usually erected on level ground. In Denmark and Germany most of those inhumation graves that are rich in Roman imports are without any exterior mark or monument which would merely have been an invitation to grave-robbers. (xi, 63).

HOUSES

A large number of prehistoric house remains are known in the Germanic and particularly in the Scandinavian countries (Mannus-Bibliothek, XI, 1913). The oldest iron-age houses, datable well before the Christian era, are in the Jutland peninsula (Fra National-museets Arbeidsmark, 1928, 1930). The largest group, consisting of foundations of some eleven hundred houses, is represented by the kämpagravar ('the warriors' graves') of the island of Gotland, many of which, datable to the first five centuries of our era, have been excavated.

[a] A reconstructed house at Lojsta in Gotland, set up by J. Nihlén and Gerda Boëthius.

[b] The foundations of the same house. In the foreground is the threshold; inside are the two rows of stone bases which carried the wooden posts or columns. This house is of the third century of our era but there are several others of similar ground-plan that are older. (xi, 70.)

THE EAST-BALTIC PEOPLES

[a] Ornamental pin.

[b] Mount of drinking horn.

[c] Fibula.

[d] Roman trulla. (xi, 67.)

[e] Armlet.

[f] Collar.

[g] Armlet.

[h]-[k<sub>2</sub>] Fibulae.

All of bronze.

[a], [d], [g], [h] found in Finland; [e] in Latvia, the rest in Esthonia. The trulla is unique as a find in this region, Roman wares being on the whole very rarely found in these countries. The fibulae are of common Germanic types, the other objects are of types that have a distribution ranging from the south-western provinces of Finland to the banks of the Vistula. (xi, 67.)

POLAND

Before the Slavs moved from their settlements on the upper Dniester south of the Pripet marshes Poland was, for the two first centuries of our era, inhabited by East-Germanic peoples, Burgundians, Vandals, etc. A trade-route followed the Vistula leading towards the south-eastern provinces of the Empire. Evidence of the extent of trade is afforded by the fact that some 20,000 Roman denarii have been found in Poland. (xi, 70, 72.)

[a], [m] Pottery bowls.

[b], [d], [j] Bronze fibulae.

[c] Gold pendant.

[e] Spearhead.

[f] Dagger.

[g] Gallo-Roman pottery kantharos with black glaze.

[h] Shears.

[i] Spindle made of amber beads threaded on a bronze wire.

[k] Bronze buckle.

[l] Iron Spur.

[c], [d] POTTERY fragments found at Elche in the Province of Alicante now in the Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Bordeaux. These fragments were found closely associated with sherds and coins of the Roman period, and are evidence for the long duration of the Iberian pottery style. The ancient type of decoration and fabric is accurately retained in the painting of the bird (height 0·16 m.); but they have experienced a certain amount of evolution in the drawing of the garland (width 0·42 m.). (xi, 499.)

[a] HANDLE of a SILVER PATERA found at Capheaton in Northumberland, now in the British Museum. In the centre is a female bust; on the left a traveller with pack and staff; on the right a shepherd and flock. The patera was probably made in Britain and its figures symbolize the commerce and prosperity of the land. (xii, 245.)

[M. Rostovtzeff, J.R.S. XIII, 1923, p. 99; and Social and Economic History of the Roman Empire, Pl. XXXI, 3]

[b] MOSAIC of Madeina in Africa, now in the Musée Alaoui at Tunis. It comes from the frigidarium of a bath in a mansion at Althiburos. There is a great variety of ships, river and sea-going, most of which are designated by their special names, some of them both in Greek and in Latin. At the top is a river-god seated among reeds; at the bottom the head of Ocean surrounded by fish. (xii, 245.)

[b]

[a] PAINTING on a circular wooden panel (diameter 30·5 cm.) from Egypt, now in the Antiquarium, Berlin. Septimius Severus and Julia Domna with their two sons in front of them. The features of Geta have been purposely defaced (cf. below, 230, g). The Emperor wears the vestis alba triumphalis and is crowned, like his son, with a golden garland set with gems. (xii, 364.)

[Die Antike, xii, 1936, p. 157 sq. Pls. 10, 11]

[b] Two views of a marble pilaster-cap found in Rome from the temple of Elagabalus and Tanit on the Palatine. In the centre is the god's conical stone set on a stool. The eagle of Juppiter is in front of the stone. On the left Minerva lays a hand on the stone, on the right another goddess (Juno? Tanit?) places her hand upon it. To the right of this goddess is Victory sacrificing a bull. (xii, 55.)

MITHRAISM

[a] BRONZE COLLECTION BOX probably from Syria in the Cabinet de Médailles of the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. It bears an inscription for "Lady Atargatis" and the names of several donors. Its diameter is 15·5 cm. (xii, 428.)

[F. Cumont, Aréthuse, 1930, pp. 41 sqq., Pl. VIII. Photograph Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris]

[b] RELIEF from the front of a MITHRAIC ALTAR found near Heddernheim, now in the Museum at Wiesbaden. Mithras slays the bull, a dog laps its blood, on his mantle is perched a crow; a snake, a crater and a lion are under the bull, on either side are torch-bearers. Above this scene are the twelve signs of the zodiac. Over this are depicted episodes of the Mithras myth and at the top Sol and Luna, while the sides of the carving have symbols of Winds and Seasons. (xii, 429.)
